

Coaching: The Problem with Helping

There are many embedded professional roles in education. Coaches, catalysts, mentors, learning leaders... all designed to help support our teacher colleagues. There are barriers to helping that may be getting in the way of achieving our and system goals. What are these barriers? How might we overcome them?

In this workshop, participants are given opportunities to:

- Identify and focus on our WHY
- Understand the Simple Truths about Helping
- Base our stance with colleagues in the Partnership Principles
- Gain skills in providing feedback and feedforward
- Problem solve the barriers to our work

Work together to explore current research into helping colleagues within a problem-solving approach. By experiencing a number of strategies as learners, participants will learn specific tactics that can be transferred to their roles working with teachers and students.
